(d) feeling anxious during a presentation

Correct answer: using technical language the listener doesn't understand

B. Write short answers

1. Define communication in your own words.

Communication is the process of exchanging information, ideas and feelings between people. A sender puts a message into words, signs or writing, sends it through a channel, and the receiver understands it and responds. It is complete only when the message is understood as the sender intended.

B. Write short answers

2. Why is feedback important in the communication process?

Feedback is the receiver's response to the message, and it tells the sender whether the message was understood correctly. Without feedback the sender cannot know if the message was clear or if it needs to be explained again. It turns one-way sending into a two-way exchange and helps remove misunderstandings.

B. Write short answers

3. What is encoding and decoding a message?

Encoding is putting thoughts and feelings into a communicable form, such as words, gestures or writing, so that they can be sent. Decoding is the receiver's job: reading, listening to or watching the message and turning it back into meaning. If either step is done badly, the message is misunderstood.

B. Write short answers

4. What are some common barriers to effective communication?

Common barriers are physical noise, such as loud surroundings or a poor phone line; semantic barriers, such as difficult words or technical language; psychological barriers, such as anger, anxiety or prejudice; and cultural barriers, such as different customs or languages. All of them can distort the message between sender and receiver.

B. Write short answers

5. Why is non-verbal communication often perceived as more trustworthy than verbal communication?

Non-verbal signals such as facial expressions, tone of voice and body language are much harder to control or fake than words. A person may say one thing while their face or posture shows the opposite feeling, and listeners usually believe the body language. That is why actions and expressions are often taken as the truer message.

B. Write short answers

6. Describe a situation where written communication would be most appropriate.

Written communication is most appropriate for formal and official matters where a permanent record is needed, for example applying for a job with a formal letter. The letter can be read carefully, kept as proof, and referred to later, which spoken words cannot offer. The chapter gives the same example: a formal letter for a job application, while a text message suits coordinating plans with friends.

C. Comprehensive Questions

1. Explain the communication process, including all key elements and their interrelationships.

The process begins with the sender, who has an idea and encodes it into a message. The message travels through a channel, such as speech, writing or a phone call, to the receiver, who decodes it into meaning. The receiver then gives feedback, which confirms understanding or asks for clarification. Noise can disturb any stage, and the whole exchange happens in a context that shapes how the message is understood. Each element depends on the others: a weak encoding, a noisy channel or missing feedback breaks the chain.

C. Comprehensive Questions

2. Discuss the strengths and limitations of verbal, non-verbal, and written communication with examples.

Verbal communication is quick and allows immediate feedback, as in a classroom discussion, but it leaves no record and can be forgotten. Non-verbal communication adds feeling and meaning through expressions and gestures, for example a smile showing welcome, but it is easy to misread across cultures. Written communication gives a permanent, careful record, as in a formal letter, but it is slow, has no immediate feedback, and its tone can be misread.

C. Comprehensive Questions

3. Analyze how noise can impact communication and suggest strategies for minimizing its effects.

Noise is anything that interferes with a message: physical noise like traffic, semantic noise like jargon, and psychological noise like stress or bias. It can make the receiver hear, read or understand the message wrongly, so decisions are made on a false message. Its effects can be reduced by choosing a quiet place, using simple and clear words, checking understanding through feedback and paraphrasing, and staying calm and attentive while listening.

C. Comprehensive Questions

4. Analyze a real-world scenario where miscommunication occurred and propose solutions for improving communication in similar situations.

A common example is a student who misunderstands homework instructions given quickly at the end of class and prepares the wrong task. The causes are hurried verbal delivery, no written record and no check of understanding. It could have been avoided if the teacher had given the instructions in writing as well, the student had repeated them back to confirm, and questions had been asked before leaving. In general, combining spoken and written messages and confirming understanding prevents such errors.

C. Comprehensive Questions

5. Imagine you are giving a presentation to a diverse audience. How would you integrate verbal, non-verbal, and written communication to ensure your message is a clear and engaging one?

Verbally, I would speak clearly and slowly, use simple words, and explain any difficult terms so that everyone can follow. Non-verbally, I would keep eye contact, use open gestures and a friendly tone, and watch the audience for signs of confusion. In writing, I would support the talk with clear slides or a handout giving the main points, so listeners can read, remember and refer to the message afterwards. Together the three forms reinforce the same message.

D. Fill in the blanks

1. Communication is the process of _____ information, ideas, and feelings.

exchanging

D. Fill in the blanks

2. The person who encodes the message is called the _____.

sender

D. Fill in the blanks

3. Anything that interferes with communication is called _____.

noise

D. Fill in the blanks

4. A formal letter is an example of _____ communication.

written

D. Fill in the blanks

5. (Unnumbered in the book) Talking on the phone is an example of _____ communication.

verbal

D. Fill in the blanks

6. (Printed as 5 in the book) _____ communication is often used in casual settings.

Informal

E. Match the communication type with its description

Match: 1. Verbal, 2. Non-verbal, 3. Written, 4. Formal, 5. Informal. Descriptions: a. Uses written words, b. Uses spoken words, c. Includes body language, facial expressions, and tone of voice, d. Follows established rules and protocols, used in professional settings, e. Casual and relaxed, used in personal settings.

1-b (Verbal uses spoken words), 2-c (Non-verbal includes body language, facial expressions and tone of voice), 3-a (Written uses written words), 4-d (Formal follows established rules and protocols in professional settings), 5-e (Informal is casual and relaxed, used in personal settings).

F. Activities

Activity-1: Scenario Analysis. Divide students into groups and give them different communication scenarios (e.g., a misunderstanding between friends, a conflict). Have them analyse the communication issues, identify the elements involved, and propose solutions for improving communication in the scenario.

How to do it: in your group, first name the sender, message, channel and receiver in the scenario, then point out where the breakdown happened (unclear encoding, noise, or missing feedback). Next, suggest a concrete fix for each fault, such as restating the message simply or asking for feedback, and present your improved version to the class.

F. Activities

Activity-2: Communication Challenge. Give students a task that requires them to communicate effectively to achieve a goal (e.g., building a tower using limited materials on verbal instructions). Debrief after the activity to discuss the challenges faced and the communication strategies used.

How to do it: the instructor gives only spoken instructions while the builders cannot see the model, so the team must listen carefully, ask short clarifying questions and confirm each step before building. In the debrief, note what helped (clear, short instructions and feedback) and what harmed the result (vague words, interruptions, or no checking), and agree on better strategies for next time.

Chapter 2: Effective Communication Skills

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. Your friend is telling you about a problem they're having with another friend. Which response shows the best active listening?

(a) "Oh, that is just drama. You need to get over it."

(b) "Have you tried just ignoring them? That's what I would do."

(c) "I know exactly how you feel. Let me tell you about what happened to me..."

(d) "Wow, that sounds tough. So, you are saying you feel left out because..." ✓

Correct answer: "Wow, that sounds tough. So, you are saying you feel left out because..."

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. Which sentence is the clearest and most concise?

(a) "Because it is raining, we should postpone the picnic." ✓

(b) "Well, you know, like, the weather, it is, I'm, not really, you know, picnic-y, so..."

(c) "Due to the fact that it is raining outside right now, I am of the opinion that we should probably postpone the picnic that we had previously planned for today."

(d) "Considering the current meteorological conditions, the outdoor recreational activity will have to be rescheduled."

Correct answer: "Because it is raining, we should postpone the picnic."

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. You are talking to a classmate who just moved here from another country and doesn't speak much Urdu. What's the best thing to do?

(a) Talk loudly so they can understand you better.

(b) Use lots of big words to help them learn English faster.

(c) Speak slowly and clearly, using simple words and maybe some pictures.

(d) Just talk to your other friends and ignore them until they learn English.

Correct answer: Speak slowly and clearly, using simple words and maybe some pictures.

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. What would most likely cause a communication problem?

(a) Listening carefully to what someone says.

(b) Interrupting someone while they're talking.

(c) Using words that everyone understands.

(d) Trying to understand how someone else is feeling.

Correct answer: Interrupting someone while they're talking.

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. Your friend is upset because he didn't become the part of the basketball team. What's the most empathetic thing to say?

(a) "Do not worry, you can try out next year."

(b) "I understand you are disappointed. That must be frustrating."

(c) "It is no big deal. There are other teams you can join."

(d) "Just forget about it. It is not worth getting upset over."

Correct answer: "I understand you are disappointed. That must be frustrating."

B. Write short answers

1. Think of a time you had a misunderstanding with someone. How could active listening have helped to avoid the misunderstanding? Give specific examples.

Take a common example: a friend says, 'I am too busy this week,' and you hear it as rejection, when they only meant they had no free time. Active listening would have helped if you had listened fully without interrupting, noticed their tired tone, and paraphrased back, 'So you mean you would like to meet, but this week is too full?' That check would have caught the wrong meaning before it became a quarrel.

B. Write short answers

2. Rewrite this sentence to make it clearer and more concise: 'In the event that you are desirous of obtaining a good grade in this class, it is imperative that you attend all of the lectures and complete all of the assignments that are given to you by the instructor.'

Clearer and more concise version: 'To get a good grade in this class, attend all the lectures and complete all the assignments.' The rewrite removes empty phrases ('in the event that', 'it is imperative that'), uses the direct verb 'attend' instead of a wordy construction, and keeps every fact of the original in half the words.

B. Write short answers

3. Imagine you are explaining the rules of your favourite board game to a younger sibling. What are some things you would do to make sure they understand? How could you avoid communication problems?

I would use short, simple words, explain one rule at a time, and show each rule by playing a practice round together instead of only telling it. I would watch their face for confusion and ask them to repeat the rule in their own words. Problems are avoided by not rushing, not using game jargon before explaining it, and praising correct play so the younger child is not afraid to ask questions.

B. Write short answers

4. What do you understand by 'Be empathetic'?

To be empathetic means to try to understand how another person is feeling and to see the situation from their point of view, rather than judging it from your own. It shows in listening without interrupting, naming the feeling ('You seem disappointed'), and responding with care instead of dismissing it. Empathy builds trust because the other person feels heard and respected.

B. Write short answers

5. How can you review your communicative sentences?

Read each sentence aloud and check it in four steps: is it clear (one idea, simple words), is it concise (no extra words), is it correct (grammar, spelling and facts right), and is it suitable for the listener (polite tone, right level of formality)? Any sentence that fails a step should be rewritten, and the final version should be read once more to confirm it says exactly what you mean.

C. Comprehensive Questions

1. You and a friend are trying to decide what to do this weekend. You want to go to a concert, but your friend wants to go to the movies. How can you use good communication skills to come to an agreement?

First listen fully to why your friend prefers the movies, without interrupting or dismissing the idea, and then explain your own wish for the concert calmly. Compare the options fairly, such as cost, timing and who else is going, and look for a compromise: a movie this weekend and a concert next weekend, or a film with live music. Agreeing together, rather than one person winning, keeps the friendship strong and both sides satisfied.

C. Comprehensive Questions

2. Your teacher is explaining a difficult concept in class, and you're not understanding. What can you do to make sure you understand the lesson?

Stay attentive instead of silently falling behind, and ask a short, specific question about the exact point you missed, for example, 'Could you explain that step again with an example?' Paraphrase the teacher's answer in your own words to check your understanding, note the key points, and if it is still unclear, ask after class or discuss it with a classmate. Checking understanding early stops a small gap from becoming a total confusion.

C. Comprehensive Questions

3. A new student in your class is very shy and doesn't talk to anyone. How could you use your communication skills to make him feel more welcome and included? What communication barriers might he be facing?

Greet him warmly, use his name, speak slowly and simply, and invite him into a small group activity so he does not have to approach others alone. Ask easy, friendly questions and listen patiently without forcing long answers. His barriers may be shyness and social anxiety, an unfamiliar language or accent, cultural differences, and the fear of being judged, all of which make a new place feel unsafe to speak in.

4. Clear and concise communication is important only when you are giving a formal presentation.

False

E. Read the lesson and mark the sentences as True or False

5. Cultural differences can sometimes lead to communication misunderstandings.

True

E. Read the lesson and mark the sentences as True or False

6. Using big words always makes you sound smarter and improves communication.

False

F. Activities

Activity-1: Telephone Tag (Message Relay). Ask students to sit in a line or circle. Whisper a short sentence or phrase to the first student, who then whispers it to the next, and so on. The last student says the message aloud. Students will listen carefully and whisper the message exactly as they hear it. Do not add or change anything. Choose a simple sentence. Discuss how the message changes and why (e.g., poor listening, unclear speech). Through this activity, highlight the importance of clear listening and speaking.

How to do it: keep the sentence short and simple, whisper it once, and pass it on exactly without correcting or adding words. When the last student speaks it aloud, compare it with the original and discuss where it changed: usually a word misheard through poor listening or unclear speech. The lesson is that careful listening and clear speech protect a message at every step.

F. Activities

Activity-2: Simple Instructions Drawing. One student gives simple, step-by-step instructions on how to draw a basic shape (e.g., a house, a stick figure) to another student who cannot see the original. Tell students to give clear, simple instructions. The student who will draw the shape will listen carefully and follow the instructions exactly. The teacher will provide simple drawing prompts. At the end of the activity, discuss any difficulties in giving or following instructions.

How to do it: the instructor describes only one step at a time, using position words (top, left, middle) and sizes, and waits for the drawer to finish before continuing. The drawer follows literally and asks a question when an instruction is unclear. Afterwards discuss which instructions worked (short, ordered, exact) and which failed (vague words like 'a bit bigger' or missing steps).

F. Activities

Activity-3: Active Listening. For this activity, choose a partner. One partner will tell their favourite memory from this school year. Keep the story short (about 1-2 minutes). The other partner will listen carefully without interrupting. After the first partner finishes, the second partner will retell the story in their own words, focusing on the main points and feelings shared. The first partner would tell the second partner if they accurately retold the story, and if anything was missed or misunderstood. Switch roles and repeat the activity.

How to do it: the listener stays silent, keeps eye contact and does not plan a reply while the story is told. Then the listener retells the main events and feelings in their own words, and the speaker corrects anything missed or misunderstood. Swapping roles shows both sides that listening is an active skill, not just waiting for your turn to speak.

Chapter 3: Non-Verbal Communication

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. Crossing your arms can often be interpreted as:

(a) openness

(b) defensiveness ✓

(c) interest

(d) confidence

Correct answer: defensiveness

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. Proxemics refers to:

(a) the study of gestures

(b) the use of space ✓

(c) vocal cues

(d) facial expressions

Correct answer: the use of space

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. Which of the following may be an example of haptics?

(a) smiling

(b) shaking hands ✓

(c) maintaining eye contact

(d) leaning forward

Correct answer: shaking hands

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. Vocalics (paralanguage) includes:

(a) the words you choose

(b) your tone of voice

(c) your clothing

(d) your posture

Correct answer: your tone of voice

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. Cultural differences in non-verbal communication can lead to:

(a) enhanced cross-cultural communication

(b) misunderstandings and misinterpretations

(c) universal understanding

(d) decreased need for verbal communication

Correct answer: misunderstandings and misinterpretations

B. Write short answers

1. How can facial expressions impact a conversation?

Facial expressions show feelings instantly, often before a word is spoken: a smile signals welcome, a frown signals doubt or displeasure, and raised eyebrows signal surprise. They can support the spoken words, making a message warmer and more believable, or contradict them, in which case listeners usually trust the face. A speaker who watches the listener's face can also tell whether the message is understood or needs explaining again.

B. Write short answers

2. Why is cultural sensitivity important in interpreting non-verbal cues?

The same gesture can mean different things in different cultures: eye contact, handshakes, personal distance and even a nod can be polite in one culture and rude in another. Without cultural sensitivity, a well-meant gesture can offend or confuse, and a normal behaviour can be misread as hostility. Knowing the other culture's norms helps the communicator judge a cue in its own context instead of their own.

B. Write short answers

3. Give two examples of how vocalics can change the meaning of spoken words.

First, the sentence 'I am fine' said in a flat, slow tone can mean sadness or tiredness, while the same words said brightly and quickly mean genuine happiness. Second, stressing a different word changes the meaning: 'I did not say you took it' accuses a different person depending on which word is stressed, and a sarcastic tone can turn praise into mockery. Tone, pitch and volume therefore carry meaning beyond the words themselves.

B. Write short answers

4. What is the importance of consistency between verbal and non-verbal messages?

When words and body language agree, the message is clear and the speaker seems honest and trustworthy. When they disagree, for example saying 'I am listening' while looking away and checking a phone, the listener becomes confused and usually believes the non-verbal signal. Consistency removes this doubt, so the listener can accept the message without wondering which signal is true.

B. Write short answers

5. Why is it important to be aware of your 'tone of voice' when communicating with someone you disagree with?

In a disagreement, a harsh or raised tone can turn a discussion into an argument, because the listener hears attack rather than reason and stops listening to the words. A calm, steady tone shows respect, keeps the focus on the issue instead of the person, and makes the other side willing to listen and compromise. Controlling tone is therefore a practical way of keeping a disagreement useful instead of harmful.

C. Comprehensive Questions

1. Discuss the various components of non-verbal communication and explain how they interact to create meaning.

The main components are facial expressions, eye contact, gestures, posture, proxemics (use of space), haptics (touch), vocalics (tone, pitch, volume) and appearance. They work together as one message: a speaker may lean forward (interest), keep eye contact (attention), gesture to stress a point, and speak warmly, and all four signals point the same way. If one signal contradicts the others, the total meaning changes, which is why non-verbal communication must be read as a whole, not cue by cue.

C. Comprehensive Questions

2. Explain how non-verbal communication can contribute to or hinder effective communication in different social settings (e.g., school, workplace, home).

At school, a teacher's encouraging nod and open posture help students feel safe to answer, while crossed arms and a stern face can silence them. At work, a firm handshake and steady eye contact build professional trust, but avoiding eye contact in an interview can look like dishonesty. At home, a hug or a caring tone comforts, whereas a cold tone during a family discussion can start a quarrel even when the words are polite. The same cues help when they match the message and hinder when they fight it.

C. Comprehensive Questions

3. How would you use body language, posture, and facial expressions to engage your audience and convey your message effectively during any presentation?

I would stand upright and face the audience, which signals confidence, and move naturally instead of hiding behind a desk. I would use open hand gestures to stress key points, keep friendly eye contact around the room so listeners feel addressed, and let my facial expressions match the content, serious for a serious point and smiling for a welcome. I would also watch the audience's faces and posture, slowing down or giving an example whenever they look confused.

C. Comprehensive Questions

4. Discuss how cultural differences can impact the interpretation of non-verbal communication with specific examples.

Eye contact is a clear example: in many Western cultures steady eye contact shows honesty, while in some Asian and African cultures prolonged eye contact with an elder can seem disrespectful. Personal space also differs: people in some cultures stand close while talking, while others keep a clear distance, so closeness can feel friendly to one person and intrusive to another. A gesture such as a thumbs-up is positive in many places but offensive in some, which is why a cue must always be judged in its cultural setting.

C. Comprehensive Questions

5. What is visual communication. State its uses through images.

Visual communication is sending a message through images rather than words, such as pictures, signs, symbols, charts and diagrams. Its uses are wide: traffic signs give instant instructions without language, a chart makes numbers easy to compare, a diagram explains how a machine works step by step, and pictures in a textbook help students remember an idea. Because images are understood quickly and across languages, they are useful wherever words alone would be slow or unclear.

D. Fill in the blanks

1. _____ encompasses all forms of communication except spoken or written words.

Non-verbal communication

D. Fill in the blanks

2. _____ refers to the use of space in communication.

Proxemics

D. Fill in the blanks

3. _____ are hand and arm movements used to express meaning.

Gestures

D. Fill in the blanks

4. _____ includes vocal cues like tone, pitch, and volume.

Vocalics

D. Fill in the blanks

5. _____ is communication through touch.

Haptics

E. Match the non-verbal cue with its potential meaning

Match: 1. Upright posture, 2. Avoiding eye contact, 3. Smiling, 4. Crossed arms, 5. Leaning forward. Meanings: A. Disinterest, B. Confidence, C. Happiness, D. Defensiveness, E. Interest.

1-B (Upright posture shows confidence), 2-A (Avoiding eye contact suggests disinterest), 3-C (Smiling shows happiness), 4-D (Crossed arms suggest defensiveness), 5-E (Leaning forward shows interest).

F. Read the given statements carefully and mark them as True or False

1. Non-verbal communication is less important than verbal communication.

False

F. Read the given statements carefully and mark them as True or False

2. Facial expressions are universally understood across all cultures.

False

F. Read the given statements carefully and mark them as True or False

3. Our tone of voice can change the meaning of our words.

True

F. Read the given statements carefully and mark them as True or False

4. It is impossible to misinterpret non-verbal cues.

False

F. Read the given statements carefully and mark them as True or False

5. Cultural differences can significantly impact the interpretation of non-verbal cues.

True

G. Activities

Activity-1: Silent Acting Game. Divide the class into teams. Each team member acts out a word or phrase using only gestures. The other team members guess the word or phrase. This fun activity helps students practise using gestures expressively and understands how gestures can convey meaning.

How to do it: one player mimes a word using only hands, face and posture, without speaking or spelling letters in the air. The team guesses aloud and the actor adjusts the gestures, bigger or slower, until the word is found. Afterwards discuss which gestures were clearest and why: simple, large and familiar actions are read fastest.

G. Activities

Activity-2: Interpreting Emotions. Observe people interacting in a public space (e.g., a cafe, park). Try to interpret their emotions and intentions based on their body language. Discuss your observations with your classmates.

How to do it: watch from a respectful distance and note posture, expressions, gestures and distance between people, then guess the feeling behind them (happy, tense, bored) with a reason for each guess. In discussion, compare guesses and note where the same cue was read differently, which shows why non-verbal cues need context before judging.

G. Activities

Activity-3: Posture Analysis. Have students observe the posture of different people in a video clip or a public space (respectfully and from a distance). Discuss what messages their posture might be conveying. Consider factors like their facial expressions and the context of the situation.

How to do it: pick three people in a clip and describe each posture (upright, slumped, leaning) together with their facial expression and the situation. Then agree on the likely message for each, for example upright plus smiling in a greeting means confidence and welcome, while slumped shoulders in a waiting room may mean tiredness rather than rudeness.

Chapter 4: Written Communication Skills

(a) book

(b) runs

(c) she ✓

(d) quickly

Correct answer: she

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

(iii) An adverb modifies:

(a) a noun

(b) a pronoun

(c) a verb, adjective, or another adverb ✓

(d) a preposition

Correct answer: a verb, adjective, or another adverb

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

(iv) Which part of speech connects words, phrases, or clauses?

(a) preposition

(b) conjunction

(c) interjection

(d) article

Correct answer: conjunction

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

(v) "Wow!" is an example of a/an:

(a) conjunction

(b) interjection

(c) preposition

(d) adverb

Correct answer: interjection

B. Write short answers

1. Define the terms "subject," "verb," and "object" in a sentence.

The subject is the person or thing the sentence is about, for example 'Ali' in 'Ali reads a book.' The verb is the action or state, here 'reads.' The object is the person or thing that receives the action, here 'a book.' Together they form the core of a sentence: who does what to what.

B. Write short answers

2. Give two examples each of nouns and pronouns.

Nouns name a person, place, thing or idea, for example 'teacher' and 'Lahore.' Pronouns are words used in place of nouns, so that a noun need not be repeated, for example 'he' and 'she': instead of saying 'Ali is late because Ali missed the bus,' we say 'Ali is late because he missed the bus.'

B. Write short answers

3. Explain the difference between an adjective and an adverb.

An adjective describes a noun or pronoun, for example 'red' in 'a red ball' or 'happy' in 'a happy child.' An adverb describes a verb, an adjective or another adverb, for example 'quickly' in 'She runs quickly' or 'very' in 'very happy.' In short, adjectives add detail to things, while adverbs add detail to actions and descriptions.

B. Write short answers

4. What is the function of a preposition? Give two examples.

A preposition shows the relationship of a noun or pronoun to another word in the sentence, usually place, time or direction, and it comes before its noun or pronoun. Two examples are 'in' in 'The book is in the bag' and 'on' in 'The cup is on the table.' Other common prepositions are 'at', 'under', 'between' and 'after.'

B. Write short answers

5. What are the four main types of sentences based on their purpose? Give one example for each.

The four types are: declarative, which states a fact, for example 'The sun rises in the east.'; interrogative, which asks a question, for example 'Where are you going?'; imperative, which gives a command or request, for example 'Please sit down.'; and exclamatory, which expresses strong feeling, for example 'What a beautiful day!'

C. Comprehensive Questions

1. Explain the importance of understanding parts of speech in constructing grammatically correct sentences?

Parts of speech are the building blocks of a sentence: knowing whether a word is a noun, verb, adjective or adverb tells you where it belongs and what it can do.

Without this knowledge, words are placed wrongly, verbs disagree with subjects, and modifiers describe the wrong word, so the sentence becomes unclear or incorrect. A writer who knows the parts of speech can build sentences that are correct, clear and varied, which is the basis of all good written communication.

C. Comprehensive Questions

2. Analyze the following sentence, identifying all the parts of speech: "The friendly dog quickly ran across the park and fetched the red ball."?

The = article; friendly = adjective describing dog; dog = noun (subject); quickly = adverb describing ran; ran = verb; across = preposition; the = article; park = noun (object of the preposition); and = conjunction joining the two actions; fetched = verb; the = article; red = adjective describing ball; ball = noun (object). The sentence therefore has two verbs (ran, fetched) joined by 'and', with adjectives and an adverb adding detail to the nouns and verbs.

C. Comprehensive Questions

3. Explain how the meaning of a sentence can change depending on whether it is in active or passive voice?

In the active voice the subject performs the action, as in 'Ali wrote the letter,' so the focus is on the doer. In the passive voice the subject receives the action, as in 'The letter was written by Ali,' so the focus moves to the action and its result, and the doer can even be left out: 'The letter was written.' Changing voice therefore changes emphasis: active voice is direct and strong, while passive voice suits formal writing where the result matters more than who did it.

C. Comprehensive Questions

4. Create a short paragraph (3-4 sentences) using at least five different parts of speech correctly.

Model paragraph: 'The young (adjective) students (noun) eagerly (adverb) prepared (verb) for the school (noun) exhibition (noun). They (pronoun) carefully (adverb) arranged (verb) their colourful (adjective) charts (noun) on (preposition) the tables (noun) and (conjunction) proudly (adverb) explained (verb) their projects (noun) to the visitors (noun). Wow (interjection), the exhibition was a great success!' This paragraph uses nouns, pronouns, verbs, adjectives, adverbs, a preposition, a conjunction and an interjection, all in correct positions.

C. Comprehensive Questions

5. Write an email to your friend regarding examination.

Model email: Subject: Our coming examinations. Dear Ahmed, I hope you are well. I am writing because our examinations begin next month, and I wanted to ask how your preparation is going. I have finished revising English and Mathematics, but I still need help with Science, especially the physics numericals. Could we study together on Saturday morning at my house? We could solve past papers and test each other. Please let me know if Saturday suits you. Your friend, Bilal. Note the proper structure: subject line, greeting, clear body in short paragraphs, and a polite closing.

G. Activities

Activity-1: Making Sentences. Form pairs of students. First, write down three sentences that contain direct objects. Then, write down three other sentences that contain both direct and indirect objects. Use different colours to mark the different parts of each sentence (Subject, Verb, Object). One volunteer shows their list to the class.

How to do it: first write sentences with one object, for example 'She bought a pen' (pen = direct object). Then write sentences with two objects, for example 'She gave her friend a pen' (friend = indirect object, pen = direct object). Mark subject, verb and objects in different colours, and let a volunteer explain their colouring to the class so errors can be corrected together.

G. Activities

Activity-2: Email Practice. Students draft emails for various scenarios, such as requesting information, applying for a program, or apologizing for a mistake, paying close attention to email etiquette.

How to do it: choose one scenario and plan the email first: a clear subject line, a polite greeting, a short body that states the purpose in the first line, and a courteous closing with your name. After drafting, exchange emails with a classmate and check each other's tone, spelling and structure, then rewrite the weak parts.

G. Activities

Activity-3: Active and Passive Voice. With the same pairs as above, write a paragraph on any topic. The paragraph should have at least two sentences in active voice and two sentences in passive voice. One volunteer reads out their paragraph to the class. The class gives feedback, if correct.

How to do it: write a short paragraph, for example about your school, and deliberately include two active sentences ('The students cleaned the hall') and two passive ones ('The hall was decorated by the art club'). When a volunteer reads it aloud, the class checks each sentence: who is the doer, and is the voice correctly used?

G. Activities

Activity-4: Types of Sentences. With the same pairs as above, make a list of minimum eight sentences. These should have at least two sentences of each type - declarative, interrogative, exclamatory and imperative. For each type of sentence, different volunteers read out their sentences to the class. The class gives feedback on the correctness of the sentences.

How to do it: write two of each type on one topic, for example a school trip: declarative ('We visited the museum.'), interrogative ('Did you enjoy the trip?'), imperative ('Please bring your notebook tomorrow.'), exclamatory ('What a wonderful trip it was!'). Volunteers read one type at a time so the class can judge the punctuation and purpose of each.

Chapter 5: Confidence Building and Self-Presentation

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. A factor causing social anxiety is:

(a) positive thinking

(b) negative self-talk ✓

(c) physical exercise

(d) loud environments

Correct answer: negative self-talk

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. Gradual exposure is:

(a) avoiding social events

(b) facing fears step by step ✓

(c) ignoring anxiety

(d) practicing deep breathing

Correct answer: facing fears step by step

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. An example of assertive communication is:

(a) interrupting others

(b) avoiding opinions

(c) expressing needs ✓

(d) blaming others

Correct answer: expressing needs

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. Aggressive communication is:

(a) respecting others

(b) ignoring problems

(c) being too forceful

(d) staying silent

Correct answer: being too forceful

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. We can build self-confidence by:

(a) setting small goals

(b) avoiding challenges

(c) seeking approval

(d) ignoring weaknesses

Correct answer: setting small goals

B. Answer the following questions briefly

1. Define shyness and social anxiety. How are they different?

Shyness is a mild, common feeling of discomfort or quietness around unfamiliar people, which usually fades as a person gets comfortable. Social anxiety is stronger and longer-lasting: an intense fear of being judged, embarrassed or rejected in social situations, which can make a person avoid class discussions, presentations or gatherings altogether. Shyness is a personality tendency; social anxiety is a fear that interferes with daily life and may need support and strategies to manage.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

2. How does negative self-talk impact self-confidence?

Negative self-talk is the habit of telling yourself things like 'I cannot do this' or 'Everyone will laugh at me.' Repeated often, these thoughts are believed, so the person stops trying, avoids challenges, and performs worse, which then seems to prove the negative thought right. In this way negative self-talk lowers confidence, increases anxiety, and blocks learning, while replacing it with realistic, positive self-talk rebuilds confidence step by step.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

3. Name two strategies that can help manage social anxiety.

First, gradual exposure: facing feared situations step by step, starting small, for example speaking to one friend, then a small group, then the class, so confidence grows with each success. Second, positive self-talk and calming techniques: replacing 'I will fail' with 'I have prepared and I can try,' and using slow, deep breathing before speaking to calm the body. Used together, they reduce fear instead of letting avoidance strengthen it.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

4. What is the role of self-confidence in achieving personal and professional goals?

Self-confidence gives a person the courage to set goals, take the first step, and keep going after setbacks instead of giving up. Confident people speak up in class, apply for opportunities, and handle criticism as advice, which opens doors in study and work. Without confidence, even a capable person avoids chances, so goals stay unattempted; with it, effort and learning turn ability into achievement.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

5. Differentiate between assertive and aggressive communication.

Assertive communication expresses your needs, opinions and feelings clearly and honestly while respecting the other person's rights, for example, 'I feel upset when my work is not considered; can we discuss it?' Aggressive communication forces your view on others: shouting, blaming, interrupting or threatening, which may win the moment but damages respect and relationships. Assertive speakers are firm and polite; aggressive speakers are forceful at the cost of others.

C. Match the terms in Column A with the correct descriptions in Column B Match: 1. Social Anxiety, 2. Negative Self-Talk, 3. Gradual Exposure, 4. Assertive Communication, 5. Passive Communication. Descriptions: a) Expressing thoughts clearly and respectfully, b) Facing fears step by step, c) Fear of being judged in social situations, d) Saying "I can't do this" instead of "I'll try", e) Avoiding conflict by staying silent.

1-c (Social anxiety is fear of being judged in social situations), 2-d (Negative self-talk says 'I can't do this' instead of 'I'll try'), 3-b (Gradual exposure is facing fears step by step), 4-a (Assertive communication expresses thoughts clearly and respectfully), 5-e (Passive communication avoids conflict by staying silent).

D. Answer the following questions in detail

1. Analyze how past negative experiences can shape a person's social anxiety. Provide examples.

A bad experience teaches the mind to expect the same result again: a student laughed at during a class presentation may feel panic before every future presentation, even a well-prepared one. Repeated embarrassment, teasing or harsh criticism builds the belief 'people will judge me,' so the person starts avoiding social situations, and avoidance prevents any good experience that could correct the belief. Over time the fear grows stronger than the original event, which is why small, successful steps and supportive feedback are needed to break the cycle.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

2. Evaluate the effectiveness of gradual exposure and positive self-talk in overcoming social anxiety. Which do you think is more effective and why?

Gradual exposure works because it gives real proof: each small success, such as answering one question in class, weakens the fear and builds a record of coping. Positive self-talk works because it changes the inner commentary from 'I will fail' to 'I can try,' which lowers anxiety before the event. In my view gradual exposure is more effective on its own, because action creates lasting evidence, but the two work best together: positive self-talk gives the courage to take the first small step, and exposure turns that courage into confidence.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

3. Compare and contrast the long-term impacts of self-confidence and low self-confidence in professional success.

A confident professional seeks training, volunteers for responsibility, accepts feedback and recovers from failure, so skills and reputation grow over years. A person with low self-confidence avoids visible tasks, declines promotions and stays silent in meetings, so even good ability remains unseen and career growth stalls. Both patterns feed themselves: success builds confidence, while missed chances confirm self-doubt. The difference is therefore not talent alone, but whether confidence allows talent to be used and developed.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

4. Apply the assertive communication techniques learned in this unit to resolve a conflict between two classmates. Provide a possible dialogue.

Model dialogue: Ayesha: 'Ahmed, I felt upset when you used my notes without asking, because I had worked hard on them. Can we agree to ask each other first in future?' Ahmed: 'I am sorry, I did not think of it that way. I was in a hurry, but I should have asked.' Ayesha: 'Thank you. You can borrow them anytime if you ask, and I will share them gladly.' This is assertive because Ayesha states her feeling and need calmly with 'I' statements, does not blame or shout, and ends with a fair agreement both sides accept.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

5. Create a personalized self-confidence improvement plan for a student struggling with public speaking. Include at least three steps with explanations.

Step 1: Prepare in small pieces. Break the speech into short sections, practise one section aloud daily, and master each before joining them, so the task feels manageable instead of frightening. Step 2: Use gradual exposure. First speak to a mirror, then to one trusted friend, then to a small group, and finally to the class, recording what went well each time. Step 3: Replace negative self-talk and review progress. Before speaking, repeat a realistic statement such as 'I have practised and I can get my points across,' breathe slowly, and after each talk note one strength and one point to improve, so confidence grows on evidence.

E. Activities

Activity-1: Ask students to answer the following questions: "Describe a time you felt nervous in a social situation. How could you have handled it differently using strategies from this unit?". The students will pair up and share their responses.

How to do it: each student first writes a short, honest answer naming the situation, the feeling, and the strategy they would now use, such as gradual exposure, positive self-talk or assertive speaking. In pairs, they share their answers and suggest one more strategy for each other. Hearing that classmates feel nervous too reduces shame, and practising the strategies in words makes them easier to use for real.

E. Activities

Activity-2: Present three short real-life scenarios: handling stage fright, resolving a conflict, and asking a question in class. Students will write or discuss how they would respond using confidence-building techniques.

How to do it: for stage fright, plan slow breathing, a prepared opening line, and eye contact with one friendly face. For a conflict, use calm 'I' statements and listen before replying. For asking a question in class, write the question down first, raise your hand early, and ask it in one short sentence. Discussing all three shows that the same tools, preparation, small steps and calm self-talk, fit many situations.

E. Activities

Activity-3: Let students write one key takeaway from the lesson and one strategy they will apply in real life.

How to do it: each student writes two lines in their notebook: one thing they learned, for example 'assertive means firm and polite, not aggressive,' and one strategy they will actually use this week, for example 'I will ask one question in class.' Sharing a few aloud lets the class collect practical strategies, and writing the promise down makes it more likely to be kept.

Chapter 6: Personal Grooming and Hygiene

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. The most important aspect of personal hygiene is:

(a) wearing fashionable clothes

(b) applying makeup

(c) keeping a tidy room

(d) regularly washing hands ✓

Correct answer: regularly washing hands

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. The skin type, characterized by dryness and flakiness is:

(a) oily skin

(b) combination skin

(c) dry skin ✓

(d) normal skin

Correct answer: dry skin

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. The primary purpose of using sunscreen daily is to:

(a) protect skin from UV rays ✓

(b) keep the skin moisturized

(c) improve skin texture and tone

(d) remove acne and freckles

Correct answer: protect skin from UV rays

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. One of the major benefits of maintaining good hygiene is that it:

(a) increases social media followers

(b) reduces the risk of infections and diseases

(c) makes one famous

(d) improves one's memory

Correct answer: reduces the risk of infections and diseases

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. A preventive measure for dealing with dandruff is:

(a) avoiding shampoo

(b) using harsh chemicals

(c) using dandruff-specific shampoo

(d) applying heavy oils to the scalp

Correct answer: using dandruff-specific shampoo

B. Answer the following questions briefly

1. Why is personal hygiene important for overall health?

Personal hygiene removes dirt, germs and sweat from the body before they can cause infection or illness. Washing hands, bathing, brushing teeth and keeping nails clean stop germs from entering the body or spreading to others. Good hygiene therefore protects both the person and the people around them, and it also supports comfort, freshness and self-confidence in daily life.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

2. Name one common hair care issue and provide a solution for it.

Dandruff is a common issue: flakes of dry skin on the scalp that can cause itching and embarrassment. It can be reduced by washing hair regularly with a dandruff-specific shampoo, massaging it gently into the scalp, avoiding harsh chemicals and heavy oils, and keeping the scalp clean and dry. If itching or flaking continues for weeks, a doctor or dermatologist should be consulted.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

3. What is the role of sunscreen in a skincare routine?

Sunscreen protects the skin from the sun's harmful ultraviolet (UV) rays, which cause sunburn, early ageing and increase the risk of skin damage. Applied daily to exposed skin, and reapplied after sweating or swimming, it acts as a shield while other skincare steps clean and moisturise. It is therefore not a beauty extra but the protective step that keeps the skin healthy over time.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

4. What are the primary components of a basic skincare routine?

A basic routine has three steps: cleansing, to remove dirt, oil and sweat; moisturising, to keep the skin soft and prevent dryness; and sun protection, using sunscreen daily against UV rays. Products should suit the skin type, for example oil-free products for oily skin and gentle, rich moisturisers for dry skin. Done morning and evening, these three steps keep skin clean, balanced and protected.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

5. How can you prevent acne through proper skincare?

Acne forms when pores are clogged by excess oil, dirt and dead skin, so prevention means keeping the skin clean without harsh scrubbing. Wash the face twice daily with a gentle cleanser, use oil-free products, avoid touching the face with unwashed hands, and do not squeeze spots, which spreads infection. A healthy diet, enough water and regular pillowcase washing also help, and persistent acne should be shown to a doctor.

C. Match the items in Column A with the correct descriptions in Column B Match: 1. Oily skin, 2. Business Casual, 3. Acne, 4. Sunscreen, 5. Formal Attire.

Descriptions: a. Suitable for social gatherings and professional settings, b. Common issue caused by clogged pores and excess oil, c. Helps protect skin from harmful UV rays, d. Requires regular washing and oil-free products, e. Ideal for weddings, galas, or business meetings.

1-d (Oily skin requires regular washing and oil-free products), 2-a (Business casual is suitable for social gatherings and professional settings), 3-b (Acne is a common issue caused by clogged pores and excess oil), 4-c (Sunscreen helps protect skin from harmful UV rays), 5-e (Formal attire is ideal for weddings, galas or business meetings).

D. Answer the following questions in detail

1. Explain the significance of maintaining healthy skin and hair as part of personal grooming. Discuss how it impacts health, self-confidence, and social interactions.

Healthy skin and hair are the body's first barrier: clean, cared-for skin resists infection, and healthy hair and scalp avoid itching, dandruff and hair fall. They also shape how a person feels: someone who looks clean and tidy usually feels more confident, speaks more freely and takes part more readily. Socially, good grooming creates a positive first impression, showing respect for oneself and for others, while neglected grooming can cause embarrassment and avoidance. Grooming is therefore health care, confidence care and social care at once.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

2. Describe how to identify different skin types and explain the specific care required for each type.

Skin types can be identified by how the skin feels a few hours after washing: oily skin looks shiny, especially on the forehead and nose, and needs regular washing with oil-free products; dry skin feels tight and flaky and needs gentle cleansing and rich moisturiser; combination skin is oily in the T-zone (forehead, nose, chin) and dry elsewhere, so it needs balanced, light products; normal skin feels comfortable and even and needs only regular cleansing and moisturising. In every case daily sunscreen protects the skin, and new products should be tested on a small area first.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

3. What are the basic hygiene practices that should be followed daily to maintain cleanliness and prevent health issues? Provide examples.

Daily practices are: washing hands with soap before eating and after using the toilet; bathing and changing into clean clothes; brushing teeth twice a day and flossing; keeping nails short and clean; washing hair regularly and keeping the scalp clean; and keeping the living space tidy. Examples make the point clear: handwashing stops stomach infections, toothbrushing prevents cavities and bad breath, and clean nails stop dirt and germs from reaching food. Done daily, these small habits prevent most common infections.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

4. Discuss the different dress codes (casual, business casual, formal, and cultural) and explain when and why each is appropriate.

Casual dress, such as comfortable everyday clothes, suits relaxed outings with friends and family where comfort matters most. Business casual, neat trousers or a dress with a smart top, suits workplaces and semi-formal gatherings where a professional but relaxed look is expected. Formal attire, such as a suit or formal dress, suits weddings, galas and business meetings where respect and seriousness must be shown. Cultural dress follows the customs of a community or occasion, such as traditional dress at Eid or a religious event, and shows respect for that culture. Choosing the right code shows that the wearer understands the occasion and respects the people present.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

5. Explain how dressing appropriately for different occasions impacts first impressions and professional credibility.

First impressions form in seconds, and clothing is one of the first things noticed: a neat, occasion-appropriate outfit signals that the person is prepared, respectful and serious. In professional life this builds credibility, because clients and employers trust someone who looks the part before a word is spoken. Dressing too casually for a formal occasion, by contrast, can look careless and weaken trust even if the person's work is good. Appropriate dress therefore supports the message a person wants to give, while inappropriate dress works against it.

E. Activities

Activity-1: Daily Hygiene Routine Chart. Ask students to create a Daily Hygiene Routine Chart for themselves. This chart should include steps for oral care, like brushing teeth, flossing, bathing, nail care, hair care and skin care. The template in their notebooks should include a morning routine and an evening routine. Ask students to fill in their current routines and identify any areas they might improve or where they need more attention. After completing the chart, students should write a short paragraph reflecting on how regular grooming practices can impact their health, self-confidence, and overall well-being. Encourage them to discuss any changes they would like to make to their routines.

How to do it: draw two columns, Morning and Evening, and list under each the steps you actually do: brushing, flossing, bathing, nail care, hair care and skincare. Tick the steps you already do daily and circle the ones you miss, then write one short paragraph on how regular grooming affects your health, confidence and well-being. Finally, pick one missed step to add this week and tell a classmate, so the chart becomes a real plan, not just a list.

E. Activities

Activity-2: Dress for the Occasion. Prepare a set of scenario cards that describe various occasions. Examples might include a job interview at a corporate office, a family wedding, a casual outing with friends, a formal business presentation, a religious or cultural event (e.g., Namaz-e-Eid (Eid Prayer), wedding, a day at school. In pairs or small groups, students should select one card and discuss what type of outfit they would wear for that specific occasion. They should consider formality level, cultural norms, accessories and footwear. Each group will present their selected occasion and describe the outfit they chose, explaining why it is appropriate for that situation. They should also explain how their choice of outfit might influence first impressions.

How to do it: take one card, for example a job interview, and agree on the outfit as a group: formal, neat, clean shoes, simple accessories, and nothing distracting. Present the choice with reasons tied to formality and culture, such as 'a suit shows respect for the interviewers,' and explain the first impression it gives: prepared and professional. Repeat the discussion for a casual outing to show how the same person dresses differently, and why, for a different occasion.

Chapter 7: Social Manners

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. A key element of dining etiquette in formal settings is:

(a) speaking loudly

(b) using the proper cutlery ✓

(c) using the table as one likes

(d) ignoring the table setting

Correct answer: using the proper cutlery

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. The primary responsibility of a host at a formal event is to:

(a) arrive later than the guests

(b) serve food last

(c) make sure the event runs smoothly ✓

(d) leave the event early

Correct answer: make sure the event runs smoothly

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. Guests can show gratitude after a formal event by:

(a) ignoring the host

(b) sending a thank-you note ✓

(c) leaving without saying goodbye

(d) not participating in conversations

Correct answer: sending a thank-you note

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. An example of respecting cultural norms is:

(a) using inclusive language ✓

(b) ignoring dress codes

(c) criticizing other cultures

(d) talking loudly at cultural events

Correct answer: using inclusive language

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. An appropriate way to greet someone in a formal setting is to:

(a) hug them immediately

(b) shake hands or use culturally appropriate gestures

(c) ignore them

(d) ask them personal questions

Correct answer: shake hands or use culturally appropriate gestures

B. Answer the following questions briefly

1. What are the key elements of dining etiquette in formal settings?

Key elements are: using the correct cutlery in the correct order, from outside in; waiting for others, especially the host, before starting to eat; chewing with the mouth closed and not speaking with food in the mouth; passing food politely and using a napkin on the lap; and speaking quietly and politely at the table. Together these show respect for the host, the food and the other guests.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

2. Why is punctuality important when attending a formal event?

Punctuality shows respect for other people's time and for the event itself. Arriving late disturbs the programme, delays food or speeches, and makes the host's planning fail, while arriving on time lets the event start smoothly. It also creates a good impression: a punctual guest or host is seen as reliable, organised and respectful, which is the reputation formal occasions reward.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

3. What role does a host and a guest play during a formal event?

The host plans and runs the event: sending invitations, arranging seating and food, welcoming guests, and making sure everything runs smoothly. The guest's role is to respond on time, arrive punctually, dress appropriately, follow the host's arrangements, and thank the host afterwards. When both sides play their part, the event feels comfortable and respectful for everyone.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

4. Why is it important to respect cultural norms and traditions in social interactions?

Cultural norms carry a community's values, religion and traditions, so respecting them shows that we value the people themselves, not only their company. Ignoring them, for example by criticising food customs or dress, can offend deeply even when no offence was intended. Respect avoids misunderstandings, builds trust across communities, and lets people of different backgrounds mix comfortably and learn from one another.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

5. How can good table manners contribute to a positive social experience?

Good table manners make the meal pleasant for everyone: no one is disturbed by loud chewing, reaching across others, or confusion over cutlery. They show consideration for the host and fellow guests, which makes conversation relaxed and enjoyable. A guest with good manners is also remembered positively, so the meal becomes a social success, not merely a meal.

C. Match the phrases in Column A with the appropriate ones from Column B

Match: 1. Hosts' responsibility, 2. Guests' responsibility, 3. Cultural norm, 4. Table manner, 5. Punctuality. Descriptions: a. Waiting for others to start eating, b. Sending thank-you notes after an event, c. Making sure the event runs smoothly, d. Respecting the time and arriving on time, e. Greeting with culturally appropriate gestures.

1-c (Hosts' responsibility is making sure the event runs smoothly), 2-b (Guests' responsibility is sending thank-you notes after an event), 3-e (Cultural norm is greeting with culturally appropriate gestures), 4-a (Table manner is waiting for others to start eating), 5-d (Punctuality is respecting the time and arriving on time).

D. Answer the following questions in detail

1. Explain the roles and responsibilities of hosts and guests at formal events. Discuss how each contributes to the overall success of the event.

The host's responsibilities are planning (invitations, venue, seating, menu), welcoming guests warmly, seeing that food and programme run on time, and handling problems quietly. The guest's responsibilities are replying on time, arriving punctually and suitably dressed, following the host's arrangements, joining conversations politely, and thanking the host afterwards. Each side's effort supports the other: a prepared host plus considerate guests make the event run smoothly, while neglect on either side creates confusion and embarrassment.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

2. Analyze the significance of cultural norms and traditions in shaping social etiquette. How do they influence our behaviour and interactions with others?

Cultural norms shape what counts as polite: how people greet, what they wear, what they eat and how they speak to elders. A norm learned at home, such as removing shoes before entering a house, feels natural to its own community but may surprise outsiders. Because norms differ, behaviour that is polite in one culture, like direct eye contact, can seem rude in another, so etiquette must adapt to the people present. Understanding this prevents offence and turns social meetings into respectful exchanges instead of misunderstandings.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

3. Compare and contrast the social expectations in different cultures regarding greetings, gift-giving, and dining etiquette. Provide examples of cultural differences.

Greetings differ widely: a handshake is common in formal Western settings, a bow in Japan, and 'Assalam-o-Alaikum' with a hand on the heart in many Muslim communities. Gift-giving also differs: in some cultures a gift is opened at once with thanks, in others it is set aside to be opened later, and certain gifts, like alcohol in a Muslim home, are inappropriate. Dining differs too: some cultures eat with the right hand from a shared dish, others use cutlery and individual plates, and in some the host eats last. Knowing these differences, and asking politely when unsure, is the practical core of cross-cultural etiquette.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

4. Discuss how one can plan and execute a formal event, ensuring attention to detail in areas like invitations, seating arrangements, and decor.

Planning starts with the purpose and guest list, then the date, venue and budget. Invitations should go out early with clear time, place and dress code, and replies should be tracked to fix seating and food quantities. Seating should mix guests thoughtfully and keep families and elders comfortable, while decor should suit the occasion without blocking movement or conversation. On the day, a checklist for food, seating, programme and welcome helps the host deal with problems calmly, and a thank-you afterwards closes the event gracefully.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

5. Explain how cultural awareness and sensitivity can foster inclusive social interactions. Discuss how respecting and adapting to different cultural practices can lead to positive social outcomes.

Cultural awareness means noticing that guests may have different customs for greeting, food, dress and prayer, and planning so that no one is excluded or embarrassed. Sensitivity adds action: offering food choices that respect dietary rules, allowing time for prayer such as Namaz, using inclusive language, and avoiding jokes about any culture. When people feel their identity is respected, they relax, take part and trust the host, which turns a formal gathering into an inclusive social success. Respecting and adapting to different practices therefore benefits everyone, not only the guests whose customs are honoured.

E. Activities

Activity-1: Table Etiquette Roleplay. In small groups, set up a mock dining table with plates, cutlery, and napkins. Take turns playing the role of a host and a guest at a formal dinner. Practice table manners: using the correct cutlery, chewing with your mouth closed, passing food politely, and using a napkin. After the role-play, discuss what went well and areas for improvement.

How to do it: set a small table with plates, cutlery and napkins, and assign one student as host and the rest as guests at a formal dinner. Practise in turn: correct cutlery use, waiting for the host, chewing with the mouth closed, passing food politely, and using a napkin. After the role-play, discuss what went well, for example polite passing, and what needs improvement, for example starting before the host, so the class leaves with clear habits.

(d) end with "call me back whenever"

Correct answer: provide your contact information and reason for calling

B. Answer the following questions briefly

1. Why is proper telephone etiquette important in a professional setting?

In a professional setting, a missed or careless phone call can lose a client, delay a decision or damage trust, so telephone etiquette protects the organisation's reputation. A polite greeting, clear speech, careful listening and a prompt reply show respect for the caller's time. Because the caller cannot see the speaker, tone and words carry the whole impression, which makes good phone manners even more important than in face-to-face talk.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

2. What are some key elements to include when introducing yourself in a formal context?

A formal introduction should include a polite greeting, your full name, and your role or purpose, for example, 'Good morning, I am Ahmed Raza, the new accounts assistant.' Use the other person's name and title correctly, make eye contact and shake hands where appropriate, and add one short sentence explaining why you are meeting. Ending with a courteous remark, such as 'It is a pleasure to meet you,' leaves a professional first impression.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

3. Describe the proper way to handle a missed call in a professional manner.

Return the call as soon as possible, apologise briefly for missing it, and state your name and the reason for calling back. For example: 'Good afternoon, this is Sara. I am sorry I missed your call; I am returning it about tomorrow's meeting.' Do not wait for the caller to try again, and do not send only a vague text instead of calling, because the matter was important enough for a phone call.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

4. Explain the concept of non-verbal communication and give one example.

Non-verbal communication is the message sent without words, through facial expressions, gestures, posture, eye contact and tone of voice. One example is a firm handshake with eye contact and a smile when meeting a client: before a word is spoken, it signals confidence, honesty and welcome. Because listeners often trust these signals more than words, they are a major part of any professional impression.

B. Answer the following questions briefly

5. How can you ensure that your phone conversation is professional and effective?

Speak in a quiet place, greet the caller politely, state your name and purpose at the start, and listen without interrupting. Keep the conversation short and on the point, use a calm, clear tone, confirm any decisions or next steps before closing, and end with a polite goodbye. Avoid background noise, eating, or doing other work during the call, since the caller hears the lack of attention at once.

C. Match the phrases in Column A with the appropriate ones from Column B

Match: 1. Proper Greeting, 2. Professional Email, 3. Workplace Manners, 4. Effective Phone Conversation, 5. Introduction in Professional Settings, 6. Voicemail Etiquette. Descriptions: A. Leaving a concise and polite message when you can't reach the person. B. Offering a firm handshake and eye contact to make a good first impression. C. Demonstrating good posture and active listening during conversations. D. Introducing oneself clearly and mentioning key information like name and title. E. Addressing colleagues politely and maintaining professionalism at all times. F. Communicating with clarity and in a courteous tone in written form.

1-B (Proper greeting is offering a firm handshake and eye contact to make a good first impression), 2-F (Professional email is communicating with clarity and in a courteous tone in written form), 3-E (Workplace manners are addressing colleagues politely and maintaining professionalism at all times), 4-C (Effective phone conversation is demonstrating good posture and active listening during conversations), 5-D (Introduction in professional settings is introducing oneself clearly and mentioning key information like name and title), 6-A (Voicemail etiquette is leaving a concise and polite message when you can't reach the person).

D. Answer the following questions in detail

1. Discuss the key principles of telephone etiquette in a workplace setting.

Key principles are: answer promptly and greet the caller with your name and organisation; speak clearly and at a steady pace, and listen fully before replying; keep the call purposeful and brief, noting any action promised; protect privacy by not discussing confidential matters where others can hear; and close politely by confirming the next step and thanking the caller. If a call is missed, return it promptly, and if you must transfer a caller, explain why and stay on the line until the transfer succeeds.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

2. Explain how the use of proper greeting and introduction can influence the impression you leave in both formal and informal professional settings.

A proper greeting, a clear name and title, and a warm but formal tone make the other person feel respected and at ease, so the meeting starts with trust. In a formal setting this sets a professional tone for everything that follows, while in an informal professional setting, such as meeting a new colleague, it still signals friendliness and competence. A poor greeting, forgetting a name, avoiding eye contact, or joking too soon, creates doubt that later good work must undo. The first minute therefore shapes the whole relationship.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

3. Describe some workplace manners.

Workplace manners include greeting colleagues politely each day, using titles and names correctly, and respecting personal space and quiet work time. They include listening without interrupting in meetings, keeping shared spaces tidy, replying to messages promptly, and thanking people for help. Small habits matter most: holding a door, not speaking loudly on the phone in an open office, and giving credit fairly all build a respectful workplace where people work well together.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

4. What are the strategies for professional etiquette in diverse environments?

Strategies are: learn the basic norms of the cultures you work with, especially greetings, titles, personal space and holidays, and ask politely when unsure. Use clear, simple language and avoid slang, jokes or idioms that may not travel across cultures. Be flexible about time, food and dress expectations, respect religious practices such as prayer times, and correct mistakes with a quick, sincere apology. Above all, judge people by their work and character, not by unfamiliar customs.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

5. In a globalized professional environment, why is cultural sensitivity crucial?

In a globalised workplace, colleagues, clients and suppliers may come from many cultures, and a gesture, joke or scheduling choice that seems harmless at home can offend abroad. Cultural sensitivity prevents such mistakes, keeps communication clear, and builds the trust on which international business depends. It also opens opportunities: teams that respect different viewpoints solve problems more creatively and serve diverse customers better. Sensitivity is therefore not only polite, it is a professional advantage.

E. Activities

Activity-1: Role-Play - Greeting and Introducing People. Divide the class into pairs or small groups. Provide each group with a scenario card. Examples of scenarios could include meeting a new class fellow in a classroom setting, introducing yourself at a wedding reception, introducing a guest speaker in a school function and greeting a client in a business meeting. In their groups, students will act out the scenario, focusing on proper greetings, clear introductions and cultural considerations. After the role-play, each group will briefly explain what they did and why their choice of greeting and introduction was appropriate for the situation.

How to do it: take a scenario card, for example greeting a client in a business meeting, and act it out with a partner, focusing on a firm handshake, eye contact, a clear self-introduction with name and purpose, and culturally appropriate respect. After the role-play, explain to the class why your greeting and introduction fitted that situation and what you would change for a different setting, such as a wedding reception or a classroom.

E. Activities

Activity-2: Email Drafting Exercise. Provide students with a scenario where they need to send a professional email. For example sending an email to a teacher asking for an extension on a project deadline, writing a formal thank-you email after being selected as class prefect, sending a polite follow-up email after a meeting etc. Structure the email properly, including a professional greeting, body and closing etc. Ask the students to use appropriate language and tone and pay attention to spelling, grammar, and punctuation. After students have written their emails, ask them to exchange emails with a classmate and provide feedback on clarity, tone and professionalism.

How to do it: pick one scenario, for example asking a teacher for an extension, and draft the email in full: a clear subject line, a respectful greeting, a body that states the request and reason in the first lines, and a polite closing with your name. Exchange drafts with a classmate and check spelling, grammar, tone and structure, then rewrite the weak parts before submitting a final version.

Chapter 9: Media and Digital Communication

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

1. If you post inappropriate content on social media, it:

(a) could damage your personal and professional reputation ✓

(b) has no impact on your reputation

(c) may be quickly deleted

(d) will make you more popular

Correct answer: could damage your personal and professional reputation

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

2. One of the risks associated with irresponsible internet usage is:

(a) data breaches ✓

(b) more social media likes

(c) increased followers

(d) faster internet speed

Correct answer: data breaches

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

3. A main implication of posting personal information online is that it:

(a) can enhance your social media presence

(b) can be used by others to impersonate you or steal your identity ✓

(c) increases your privacy

(d) only impacts your personal life

Correct answer: can be used by others to impersonate you or steal your identity

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

4. An example of ethical use of digital content is:

(a) copying and pasting someone else's work without credit

(b) sharing someone's work with permission or proper credit

(c) editing someone's content for personal gain

(d) reposting offensive content

Correct answer: sharing someone's work with permission or proper credit

A. Choose the most appropriate answer

5. One can protect oneself from cyberbullying online by:

(a) ignoring all online interactions

(b) engaging in online arguments

(c) reporting harmful behaviour

(d) sharing personal information

Correct answer: reporting harmful behaviour

B. Match the phrases in Column A with the appropriate ones from Column B

Match: 1. Ethical use of digital content, 2. Curating content for a positive image, 3. Managing professional profiles, 4. Oversharing, 5. Reporting inappropriate online activity. Descriptions: A. Posting personal information that is unnecessary or too private, B. Regularly updating social media with career-related achievements, C. Sharing someone else's work with proper credit or permission, D. Engaging in online arguments and conflicts, E. Reporting harmful behaviour and blocking the bully.

1-C (Ethical use of digital content is sharing someone else's work with proper credit or permission), 2-B (Curating content for a positive image is regularly updating social media with career-related achievements), 3-B (Managing professional profiles is also regularly updating social media with career-related achievements - see Note), 4-A (Oversharing is posting personal information that is unnecessary or too private), 5-E (Reporting inappropriate online activity is reporting harmful behaviour and blocking the bully). Note: the book's printed table is ambiguous here. Descriptions B and D are the only ones left for items 2 and 3, but D (engaging in online arguments and conflicts) describes neither curating nor managing a profile, so both items point to B; D matches no item and appears to be a misprint or distractor.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

1. What are some long-term effects of posting inappropriate content online?

Inappropriate posts can stay online for years, because screenshots and shares survive even after deletion. A future employer, teacher or university may find them and judge the person unfit, closing doors that were open before. The person may also face bullying, loss of friends, and legal trouble if the content is offensive or false. A single careless post can therefore damage a reputation built over years, in both personal and professional life.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

2. Why is it important to maintain consistency between your online and offline personas?

Consistency matters because people judge character by whether online behaviour matches real behaviour. If someone is polite in person but rude online, others trust neither version, and the contradiction looks dishonest. A consistent presence, same values, same tone and same respect in both worlds, builds a believable reputation, while inconsistency creates doubt about which persona is real.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

3. What are some examples of ethical practices when using digital content?

Ethical practices are: sharing only with the owner's permission or with proper credit; not copying, editing or reposting others' work as your own; checking a post for truth before sharing it, so misinformation does not spread; respecting privacy by not sharing others' photos or personal details; and reporting harmful or false content instead of spreading it. These habits protect creators' rights and keep the online space honest and safe.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

4. What steps can you take to protect your privacy and personal information online?

Share as little personal information as possible: never post your home address, phone number, school timings, passwords or financial details. Set profiles to private, review privacy settings regularly, and check who can see each post before publishing. Use strong, different passwords, think before accepting unknown friend requests, and remove outdated or revealing posts during a regular profile audit.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

5. Why should you be cautious about engaging in online conflicts?

Online conflicts escalate quickly because tone is missing, words are read in the worst way, and an audience encourages harsher replies. A heated exchange can be screenshotted and shared, turning a small disagreement into public embarrassment or lasting conflict. It also wastes time and energy and can damage friendships and reputation. It is wiser to pause, reply calmly in private, or simply not engage, rather than argue in public.

C. Answer the following questions briefly

6. How can you ensure that your online presence is aligned with your career goals?

Keep your profiles aligned with your goals: a student aiming for a professional career should show learning, achievements and respectful interests, not content that contradicts those aims. Update profiles regularly with new skills, courses and achievements, remove outdated or inappropriate posts, and keep language, tone and visuals consistent across platforms. Before posting, ask: would a teacher or employer be pleased to see this? If not, do not post it.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

1. Explain the importance of maintaining a responsible and ethical digital presence.

A responsible digital presence protects reputation, because employers and teachers increasingly judge people by what they find online. It also protects safety, since careful sharing prevents identity theft, bullying and privacy breaches, and it protects others, because ethical sharing stops misinformation and respects creators. In short, a responsible presence turns the internet from a risk into a tool for learning, work and opportunity.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

2. Discuss the long-term consequences of actions like posting, commenting, or sharing content online.

Posting creates a lasting record: a photo, comment or share can be copied and resurface years later during a job or university application. Commenting can start arguments or spread rumours that harm others and the commenter's own name. Sharing without checking spreads misinformation and can break the law when the content is false or owned by someone else. Every action therefore carries long-term personal, social and sometimes legal consequences, which is why thinking before posting matters more than posting quickly.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

3. How can you manage and audit your online profiles to ensure they align with your personal and career aspirations?

Auditing means reviewing each profile regularly: list your accounts, delete or update old posts, photos and bios that no longer match your goals, and check that privacy settings control who can see your information. Then update the profile with current skills, achievements and a suitable photo, and keep the tone and visuals consistent across platforms. Done every few months, an audit ensures the online image grows with the person instead of freezing an old, careless version of them.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

4. In what ways does oversharing personal information on social media contribute to potential risks such as identity theft or cyberbullying?

Oversharing gives strangers the pieces they need to impersonate you: a full name, school, daily routine and photos can be combined to guess passwords, answer security questions or pretend to be you. It also invites cyberbullying, because personal details and emotional posts give bullies material to mock or threaten with, and once shared, the material cannot be fully taken back. Sharing less, keeping accounts private, and thinking about who might read a post are the practical defences against both risks.

D. Answer the following questions in detail

5. Describe the steps you can take to maintain a balanced digital lifestyle.

A balanced digital lifestyle means using the internet with limits and purpose. Set fixed times for study, social media and entertainment, and keep devices away during meals, family time and sleep. Prefer active uses, learning, creating and communicating, over endless scrolling, and take regular breaks to protect eyes, posture and mood. Finally, review your online habits weekly: if screen time is crowding out study, sleep or outdoor play, reduce it and replace it with an offline activity you enjoy.

E. Activities

Activity-1: Online Profile Audit. Get the students review their social media profiles (e.g., LinkedIn, Facebook, Instagram) if any. Guide them to remove any content that does not reflect their desired image or career aspirations. Ask them to update their information to ensure it is professional and current. Share one tip with the class on how to improve a professional online profile.

How to do it: open each profile you use, if any, and check the photo, bio and recent posts against the image you want, such as a serious student or a future professional. Remove or hide anything outdated, inappropriate or inconsistent, update the information to be current and professional, and note one tip to share with the class, for example 'check privacy settings every month.' Students without profiles can audit a sample profile provided by the teacher.

E. Activities

Activity-2: Research Internet Safety. Research three common internet security risks (e.g., phishing, identity theft, data breaches). Write a short paragraph for each explaining the risk and how to avoid it. Share your findings with the class and discuss the importance of practising responsible internet habits.

How to do it: choose three risks, for example phishing (fake messages that steal passwords), identity theft (using your details to pretend to be you), and data breaches (leaked personal information from a hacked site). For each, write one paragraph: what the risk is, how it happens, and how to avoid it, such as never clicking unknown links, using strong passwords, and checking privacy settings. Sharing findings in class builds a shared list of safe habits.
